Market wrap last week

European markets rose for the second straight week, with the STOXX 600 up 2.8%, as investors speculated that US-China trade tensions may have peaked. Reports suggested Beijing could exempt some US goods from its 125% tariff, and progress was noted in US talks with South Korea, Vietnam, and India. Markets were also reassured by news that Trump chose not to fire Fed Chair Powell, though he continued criticizing him over high rates. Bond yields stayed stable. Cyclical sectors outperformed, driven by hopes of a smaller global growth impact from US tariffs. Still, the IMF cut its 2025 global growth forecast to 2.8% from 3.3%. European surveys signaled slowing activity even before tariffs fully hit. The euro hit 1.1575 before pulling back to below 1.1400. Gold touched a record high above $3,500 before easing alongside stronger risk markets.

What you should know

How have corporate access and investor engagement evolved post-MiFID II and COVID-19? A new study by Embera Partners & FH St Pölten explores how issuers, brokers, and investors are adapting to shifting dynamics, the rise of ESG roadshows, and challenges for smaller companies. The findings reveal how corporate access strategies are changing across the DACH region and highlight best practices for building stronger investor relations in today's market. Curious to see the key takeaways and where corporate access is headed next? An area where Embera Partners' team can add value and has focused a lot over the last year.
